About Anne Mallory

Anne Mallory is an expert in the health and safety sphere with over 15 years industry experience.

She has held senior management positions with health and safety, quality and environmental responsibilities.

As a founder and Director of Mallory Health and Safety Consultants Ltd, she has undertaken many and varied roles in the consultancy sphere including construction, decommissioning projects, emergency arrangements and business continuity planning in high hazard industries such as civil nuclear sites. In addition, she has been involved on a voluntary basis in event planning for a number of charities.

The spectrum of work has ranged from the introduction of complete safety management systems and training processes to the evaluation of unique high hazard operations for specialist contractors. A recent project with the Medical Research Council (MRC) involved the decommissioning of a particle accelerator at Hammersmith Hospital and the construction based work running alongside the project.

She is a Chartered Fellow of the Institution of Occupational Safety and Health and a Fellow of the International Institute of Risk And Safety Management, a Member of the Emergency Planning Society and a Senior Construction Manager through the Construction Skills Certification Scheme.

Non-Standard Packages and Project Consultancy Services

Additional items can be added to the standard packages. For example to include site visits these would be charged at a standard day rate. Specific assistance with accreditations such as CHAS, Safe Contractor and Constructionline would be based on a standard hourly rate depending on the complexity of the task. Costs would be agreed with the client before the work is undertaken.

Bespoke packages can be agreed to include training and the development of specialised courses to fit in with client requirements.
